South Africa and the suzerainty of the Transvaal, is bound to insist for the protection of the British majority? We believe that we are merely voicing the opinion of the people of this country when we say that the time has come for exhibiting a little less patience and a little more firmness. The Boers are ignorant politicians, the majority of whom are sincerely convinced that Majuba Hill was a victory obtained over the resources of the entire British Empire. In that conviction they have been strengthened by their success against Dr. Jameson's troops, which, again, has been followed by the reluctance of the British Government to increase the strength of the insufficient force of British troops in South Africa. The tardy resolution to send a few thousands of redcoats to take the places of those who are to be moved up country against the Metabole can scarcely have had much effect upon the Boers, who are evidently convinced that England will not fight to maintain her supremacy in South Africa, but will only care to resign it as long as she can do so safely and cheaply. That delusion on the part of the Boers it is imperatively necessary to dispel. The best way to dispel it is, with all respect to Mr. Chamberlain, by deeds rather than words. If we want President Kruger and his Boers to understand that we mean business we must send more troops to South Africa. No other argument will be of the slightest avail to induce the Boers to redress the grievances of the Uitlanders. If we will the Boers themselves are arming to the teeth, being determined, if they can, to make the British Government believe that armed intervention on behalf of the Uitlanders would be too costly and too dangerous for this country to attempt. If we do not now induce the Boers to discontinue their armaments and to assume a more pacific attitude the more difficult it will be for us, and the worse for them, to make them do so hereafter.

OUR TIME-EXPIRED MEN.

The debate last Tuesday in the House of Commons on the subject of employment for discharged soldiers and sailors was productive at least of one satisfactory announcement. Mr. Brodrik stated that the Secretary of State for War has declined to establish an employment bureau at the War Office to look after the interests of discharged soldiers, and a private institution is to do the same for sailors. It would be well if the Admiralty would follow the example, it has not done. The truth is that this question of employment is one in respect of which we do not treat our soldiers and our sailors well. Indeed, the modern discharged soldier is much worse off than his forerunners in the service. Under the old system a soldier made the regiment his home until he was too old to do so, and then left it with a pension. Nowadays he is turned adrift after seven years' service without any knowledge of a trade, to earn his living as best he may. We submit that this is grossly unjust. If the State

tary of State for War has declined to establish an employment bureau at the War Office to look after the interests of discharged soldiers, and a private institution is to do the same for sailors. It would be well if the Admiralty would follow the example, it has not done. The truth is that this question of employment is one in respect of which we do not treat our soldiers and our sailors well. Indeed, the modern discharged soldier is much worse off than his forerunners in the service. Under the old system a soldier made the regiment his home until he was too old to do so, and then left it with a pension. Nowadays he is turned adrift after seven years' service without any knowledge of a trade, to earn his living as best he may. We submit that this is grossly unjust. If the State induces a young man to give up the life of a soldier in his country. years of his life to be based in common justice to do something in the way of obtaining employment for him afterwards. If the Government were to guarantee employment to time-expired men of good character, the effect upon the services could not fail to be beneficial. In the first place, the recruiting difficulty would be lessened, because, if young men knew that the services were a certain road to future employment, they would be inclined to join on that account; whereas they are, under the present system, often deterred from doing so by a natural anxiety about their future prospects. Secondly, the recruits would certainly be drawn from a better class than those at present, which would be so much the better for the services. Thirdly, soldiers and sailors would be induced to qualify for employment by good behaviour, and thus the level of conduct would be raised. From the civil point of view the State would seem to be the gainer. It is no small thing to be served by men who have acquired habits of discipline in the Army or Navy, and who may, therefore, be relied upon to carry those habits into any occupation they may subsequently be called upon to take up. We should like, therefore to see the persistent soldier, who, have been in the service for twenty years, transferred to some fruit, and Government departments doing more than they have ever yet done to provide employment for our time-expired soldiers and sailors.

character and comedy parts, his early appearances being at the Globe, the Gaiety, the Opera Comique, the Haymarket, and the Prince of Wales's Theatre. He became known mainly as the court Thacker with Mr. John Clayton from 1867, and remained one of the mainstays of that establishment when Mrs. John Wood assumed the management, taking leading parts in "Mamma," "Aunt Jack," "The Cabinet Minister," and other productions of the kind.

YOUNG HEROES.
Albert Edward Smith, 13, and John Mason, 14, were yesterday awarded the Royal Humane Society's testimonial for their heroism in saving life. Smith is employed as a messenger at Sandierson, Nottingham, and plunged into the canal at Sandierson, and succeeded in bringing to bank a little girl who himself became accidentally immersed.—Mason, who is described as a small boy for his age, standing only 4ft. and a few inches in height, performed a similar act of bravery, though under more difficult circumstances, in the canal at Farnworth, near Bolton, Lancashire, on Feb. 9.

Sir J. Bridge, the senior Bow-st. magistrate, has been re-elected chairman of the Hendon Parish Council.

At Sotheby's, yesterday, the large price of £200 was fetched by a manuscript, entitled "The Prince Rupert of Bavaria, printed by the Bookseller of St. John the Baptist." This is one of the earliest manuscripts known.

Latham was the title as he was not challenged now for several years, but only last season in defeating Cam. Bannard. Brighton that he gained the height of his career at tennis. The second prize was given to Mr. J. H. Latham (holder of the gold racquet Maryborough Club). Prior to the ceremony J. and Hon. THE PRISONER.
The prisoner was taken to the prison, where he will remain until he is tried for the murder of the murdered man. The prisoner is a man of about 30 years of age, and is of a dark complexion. He is a native of the West Indies, and is a member of the Rastafarian movement.

in Goldburn-nd. Just describe it. It had a green and red side inside. What, after I had it, the green glass got broken. Did you do anything to it? Yes, I put a piece of brass over the burner, so that the oil could not catch. Did you make a wick? Yes, of gauze, which my sister Emily was using for the children's shirts. Did you do anything else to it? I rubbed it with sand. I used paper to get some varnish of the bull's-eye. What kind of oil did you burn? Paraffin. Can you tell me any playmate who saw you playing with this lantern? A boy named Maynard saw it. Now tell me when you missed it? One evening I went to bed, and I found it gone. What time? Half-past 9 or 9. Was your lantern on the dresser when you went out in the morning? Yes. Who was at home when you missed it? My mother and sister. Did you speak to your mother about it? Yes. Did you ever see it again? Not until a gentleman showed it me. Who?

THE LANTERN PRODUCED.
Is that your lantern (showing a lantern)? Yes. Witness admitted that the lantern bore all the peculiarities he had described. The lantern, a mere toy, was carefully examined by the magistrates. Did you see Albert on the night you missed your lantern? No. He did not come home. What time did he come home? I don't know. What time did you get up in the morning? Eight o'clock. When you woke up was Albert there? Witness paused. Come now, tell us the truth about it. You understand what I am asking you. What? Albert. Had he his clothes on? Yes. Did you hear him come in? No. Had he his hat on? Yes. What did he say to you? He told me it was 7 o'clock. Was Albert at home that day? Yes.

THE NEW CLOTHES.
On the following morning did you go as usual next door to the thread needles for a tailor named Greenwood? Yes; and towards dinner time Albert and my sister came to fetch me. We went to a shop in Harrow. Albert bought a jacket and waistcoat and striped trousers. He took some gold from his pocket to pay for them, and my sister went further up the road to buy some clothes for my sister. When Albert came in he put on his new clothes. Did you notice his boots? They were new, but I did not see him buy them. What became of the clothes he took off? He left them in the room. On the same day that you saw the new clothes did you see anything of Bunty? Yes; he came to our house. He was wearing new clothes. What did he say about his old clothes? He said my mother could have them to alter for me. Where were the old clothes? In the house. Do you know Fred Milson, Albert's brother? Yes, he came on the same day. Was anything said about the clothes? Albert said that Fred might as well have some of the old clothes. On the same night was anything said to you about the lantern? Yes, my mother said to me, "If anybody asks you about it, you are to say you broke it and chucked it in the dusthole." The next day did you remember Albert going out? He went out, but I didn't see him. Did he come back? Yes. What day of the week was it? It was Sunday. What time was it in the morning and did not return at all? A Sunday. Was it the day before the Saturday that they bought the new clothes? Yes. Was it the day before that that he woke you up at 7 o'clock in the morning? Yes. How long was it before you ever saw him again? Fourteen. When did you see him? He came home on a Sunday night, slept there, and next day went away with my sister and the children. How long was that before the police came to see you and took you away from home? About a week. Before your sister went away, did you tell her that she had money in her possession? Yes.

A TELL-TALE TOBACCO BOX.
Did Albert smoke? Yes. Have you ever seen anything like this before? Mr. Avory held up the tobacco-box found at Muswell Hill, and the witness promptly replied that he had seen it. Was the possession of such a box ever seen by you? Yes. You say you have seen Albert with a tobacco box. Was there a name on it? I don't know. Are you prepared to say it was a Christmas card? It was a Christmas card. Do you know of any other Christmas cards? No. Where did you see him? He came to the police station. How many times have you seen the lantern since you saw him? Not since. Four times. Where have you seen him? In the police station. Mr. Avory objected, in the interests, as he said, of public policy to this line of questioning, and the bench upheld the objection. How long have you been going into this place to trade with him? Not since. When did you last see him? On the Saturday morning. Did you tell the police you saw him? Yes. Did you tell them he had a lantern? Yes. Did you tell them he had a tobacco box? Yes. Did you tell them he had a Christmas card? Yes. Did you tell them he had a lantern? Yes. Did you tell them he had a tobacco box? Yes. Did you tell them he had a Christmas card? Yes.
